Brews & Views (winter)

The Adirondack Mountains in upstate New York offer more than 2,000 miles of trails that wind along evergreen paths, pass frozen lakes, and lead out to summits with views that extend as far as the eye can see. In the winter, snowshoeing is one of the easiest ways to enjoy the snowy landscape, quenching visitor's thirst for adventure. The best part - local breweries often complement each view - in many locations, visitors can easily visit a brewery to take in local culture and sample delicious microbrews.

- Hike South Boquet Mt., then head to The Barn Door (Essex)
- Hike Severence Mt, then head to Paradox Brewery (North Hudson/Schroon)
- Hike Mt. Arab Firetower, then head to Raquette River Brewing (Tupper Lake)
- Hike Henry's Woods, then head to Big Slide Brewery (Lake Placid)
- Hike McKenzie Mountain, then head to Ray Brook Brewhouse (near Saranac Lake)

Visit Adirondack Wayfinder for the local brewery options.

Not a beer drinker? No problem, there are plenty of other combos to choose from. One favorite of many hikers is bringing some freshly brewed coffee and a homemade pastry from a local coffee shop along for the adventure.

The Adirondack Mountains offer some of the best opportunities for outdoor recreation in a beautiful, natural setting; within a day's drive for 25% of the entire North American population.
